MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR JOAQUIN MILLER

Tribute Paid "Poet of the Sierras" by California State Society at Cabin.

Joaquin Miller, poet and early settler of the west, was honored in memorial services by the California State Society at the Miller cabin in Rock Creek Park yesterday afternoon. Among the speakers were Senator James D. Phelan of California, president of the society; Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, and Representative Nicholas J. Sinnott of Oregon. Secretary Lane recounted personal reminiscences of the "poet of the Sierras," with whom he was acquainted. Senator Phelan presided. Representing active Sinnott, who was a neighbor of the poet for many years, spoke in eulogy of the trials of the frontiersman about whom Miller wrote. He told how Miller spent his younger days as a miner in California. The Rev. E. M. Mott pronounced the invocation. A quartet composed of Miss Virginia Robinson and Miss Edna Scott Smith and C. H. Evans and Arthur Middleton sang. Miss Webster gave a cello solo and Miss Smith sang a solo, accompanied by Mrs. Frank Byram. Miss Leonora de Grange recited "Columbus" and Charles E. Hanford recited "The Star Spangled Banner." Andrew J. Foster, historian of the society, presented a historic letter sketching the life of the poet, which was read by Thomas F. Flaherty. The Miller cabin, which now stands in Rock Creek Park, was formerly located in California, but at the instance of the state society was removed to Washington, dedicated and presented to the United States June 1, 1912.
